THE NATIONAL WELL-BEING.

With the growth of national importance, the augmented wealth of the country, the increase of official holdings, the multiplication of the machinery necessary to the carrying on of the governmental departments, there has been an increase of corruption in office, and the trusts of the nation have been more and more frequently betrayed. These facts, however they may glowingly impress some earnest friends of the republic, do not, after all, indicate that there has not been a great underlying increase of official criminality. With the opportunities for wrong-doing enlarged, there always is growth of wrong doing itself. It does not indicate, necessarily, that there is rational decadence; and still it must be admitted that, with the augmented importance of the nation, we have not proportionately risen superior to evil, as we might have done had our moral growth been equal to our physical advancement. On the occasion of the celebration of the natal day anniversary of the republic, the thoughtful citizen is inclined to reflect upon the question whether or not we have reason to rejoice in increased age. It is popular to decry the present and to decry what is proper. As it is, employees of the Government, except by taking time from hours due the nation, cannot visit the library at all. Rev. Robert Collyer of New York has written a letter favoring the opening of the institutions named on Sunday. It is noticeable how parallel are his views and those of Ingerson on that subject. Says the former: "It makes Sunday more sacred to open such treasures freely to the public, and especially to those who have no time to drink in their beauty and worth on week days." Says the latter: "I am in favor of being happy seven days in the week." Rev. W. W. Hicks, Congregationalist, Rev. J. Murphy, Catholic, hold like views; but Bishop Andrews, Methodist, Dr. Bartlett, Presbyterians, and Rev. F. D. Power, Campbellite, oppose them. It would seem that so long as dance houses, saloons, concert halls, beer gardens, race courses and theaters may unrestrainedly invite the public on Sunday, only a narrow view of the methods of bettering men and women will oppose the throwing open on all days of galleries and libraries and museums, where the better part of man is appealed to, and in which he will find no temptation to squander money, or yield to the baser elements of vice.

The Chinese, arrested on Sunday night for having in his possession un stamped matches, was released Monday, owing to the fact that the repeat of the wrong took effect before a complaint was filed.

The work is preparing for the Triennial Convention of the Knights of Pythias, to be held in New York next week.

The work will be done during the next six weeks, and all persons connected with the management will be kept busy.

and the adjudication of the equities between apparently conflicting interests, we are evolving the higher possibilities of a scheme of self-government by an enlightened and tolerant people. The assaults made upon our system of public education have but served to strengthen its hold upon the hearts of the people. Labor has not suffered degradation; we are becoming an industrial people in a peculiar sense, and as producers we promise to supply the largest demands of the world's markets with the staples of food. Advancing upon the plane of intelligence; augmenting our material wealth; developing our resources with nothing less than marvelous rapidity; tilling the soil and disclosing the treasures hidden in the bowels of the earth, as no nation has ever before done; encouraging the arts and sciences with lavish liberality; binding the Union together in commercial unity by a network of transportation lines unequalled in boldness of scheme, investment of capital and the surmounting of physical obstacles; fostering invention and mechanics; elevating the standard of labor; setting up guards against the contamination of our people by the introduction of non-assimilative elements, we have reason to be proud as age grows upon us, and we can welcome it without shame. Whatever there may have been of corruption in our midst, however private it may have been outraged, however wrongdoing in high places may have created public distrust, at the heart the nation is sound, and its patriotism is unimpaired. As has been well said, in the love of home and the love of country reside the motive forces of national being. With us these have not been diminished. We live as a self-governing nation, because the heart is right. We are a republic, because the hearts of our people are equal to the reception of the privileges and the responsibilities that a republic entails. As the late Dr. Holland so aptly put the proposition in one of his best moments, "A policy may modify the issues of national life somewhat, but a policy has no life in it. It is a way of national living. But the life of a stream does not depend upon the way of its flowing. Party policy may change the direction of a nation's life, but the nation carries its salvation in its own strong heart, and not in the pocket of any party." And so we say we have reason to rejoice to-day, and by outward manifestations of joy that may even take the form of revelry, testify to our faith in the patriotism of our people and the safety of the national life.

A FRENCH PLEA.

The Paris Soir puts forward a novel plea for the bombardment of Tamatave by Admiral Pierre, and for the operations in Madagascar by the French. It holds that it is an act of humanity to conquer the tao tribes of Madagascar that rules them to death.

James Scott, a pioneer of 1846, died in Colusa Monday night.
